Summary

Virtual teams are an increasingly common organizational model that aims to transform the way we work inside and across organisations. The best hires, who may be based anywhere in the world, demand flexible schedules and a work-life balance that is far from resembling the traditional eight-hour shift. Virtual teams, usually horizontally organized and geographically dispersed, bring executives in front of newly-encountered challenges and brand-new opportunities. The report focuses on organisational leadership, and more specifically on leadership in the virtual sphere. In this framework, concrete practical advice and navigational steps are given to managers and prospect managers in order to help them perform in their role successfully and productively.
